NORWICH BULLETIN
WILLIMANTIC OFFICE
Telephone 105 23 Church St.

Willimantic is to have a new industry to begin operations Monday morning next week. The product manufactured will be physicians' compresses and sanitary knitted fabric napkins.

The goods are to be manufactured by an automatic knitting machine which has been patented by Howard W. Green of Andover, who is a master mechanic and for a number of years was employed by local garages. The machine had been tested for three years and is capable of turning out an article that meets every requirement. Mr. Green some time ago interested a number of local men and the organization known as The Willimantic Knitting Company was formed, with the following officers: President, William F. Jordan; vice president, Henry A. Hughes; secretary, James P. Bath; treasurer, George S. Elliott; directors, William F. Jordan, Henry A. Hughes, Lyman A. Nichols, Howard A. Green, Fred A. Sanderson, George S. Elliott and James P. Bath. The company starts with an authorized capital of $50,000 of which $15,000 has been paid in.

The factory of the company is located in a section of the Windham Silk company plant just off Church street. Two floors are to be used by the company, the lower floor for an office and shipping room, the upper floor for machinery.

The story of the product is as follows:

The materials used in the manufacture of physicians' compresses and sanitary napkins is white thread and reclaimed cotton waste. Both are thoroughly bleached, sterilized and made absorbent. The knitting machines that are to be used are six in number made up in one unit

OLEANDERS

The Lowell Courier-Citizen man wants to know whatever became of the old-fashioned oleander, which used to stand in a tub at the door of Aunt Sophronia's house, and at the door of pretty much every other aunt's house. "The tub," says Lowell, "was always painted a gay color with the hoops painted somberly. There is possibility that the oleanders proved as dangerous as the tubs as they crept with being, and so were done away with." To be sure, the oleanders are gone. They yielded, the Nomad supposes, to fashion rather than to prejudice. Mostly the rubber plant has taken their place, though the rubber plant is stupid and vulgar compared with a good oleander. It is true that the oleander, or more particularly its blossoms, has poisonous properties; but though the Nomad as a boy was well accustomed to the plant and its flowers, he never personally heard of a case of poisoning in connection with it. There were beautiful thickets of oleander on the road from Daquiri to Santiago on soldiers were there in 1898, but no cases of poisoning were reported, though the men slept in the jungles.

Fashion in plants is really a terrible thing. It has afflicted us with a great over production of rubber plants indoors and hydrangeas out-of-doors. Just now our backyards are under the tyranny of the hydrangeas, which monopolize everything, while the more beautiful altheas is seldom seen.—Nomad in Boston Transcript.
